How To Streamline The Translation of Safety and Health Documents

Using real examples, Mr. Paeglow will present the case for the use of professional translators and show participants how the written translation of safety and health information can take advantage of productivity tools used by professional translators today. These productivity tools work best when clients use the right software to create documents, submit extractable text, and use the formatting features of word processing and layout software. As an added bonus, the updates of documents will be easier, faster and less expensive.

Richard Paeglow
 Managing Director, Inline Translation Services, Inc.

Richard S. Paeglow owns and manages Inline Translation Services, Inc. in Glendale, California. The company specializes in the translation of written materials from English to other languages and serves private, public and non-profit clients across the country. Spanish translations account for over half of the company's volume. Five full time project managers, with an average tenure of 11 years, manage projects for clients such as the State Compensation Insurance Fund, Safety Management

Consultants, Kaiser Permanente, Marsh & McLennan, Mercer, Aon, Symetra Life Insurance Company, Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, Los Angeles Zoo, Aquarium of the Pacific, the Professional Association of Diving Instructors (PADI), and many others.

Mr. Paeglow received his B.A. from the University of Kansas with majors in Spanish and Latin American Area Studies. Later, he received a Fulbright Scholarship for graduate studies in Quito, Ecuador, followed by an MBA degree from Columbia University in New York City, with majors in accounting and finance. Prior to purchasing Inline, Mr. Paeglow worked for fifteen years in general banking, management training, and business consulting, and managed the cost accounting department for a major bank in California (now part of Wells Fargo).

Mr. Paeglow is a voting member of the American Translators Association and former chair of the University of Kansas International Programs Advisory Board. He is currently president of The District Community Association, which is a major new housing development in Northridge, California.
